We, the faculty and staff of the Department of Middle Eastern Studies are dedicated to researching and educating about a region that is today plagued by violence, war, and extremism. Many of us have also lived in this region and thus have experienced firsthand the effects of such violence on individuals, families, and communities. In a context in which violence is a major problem, adding easier access to weapons, even with the intent of protection, makes things worse, rather than better. Having seen firsthand the effects of the presence of guns and other weapons in the region we study, we are deeply distressed that this is what is currently envisioned for the University of Texas at Austin.

More specifically, our faculty, staff, and students are fearful because on a daily basis, we teach, research and discuss topics that are by their very nature emotionally and ideologically charged. We teach about religion, including Islam, Judaism and Christianity. We also deal with conflicts like the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, Sunni-Shi’i sectarian relations, the civil war in Syria, the Armenian Genocide issue, human rights, gender and sexuality, religious and ethnic minorities, the Iraq and Afghan wars, violent extremism, and terrorism. Increasing the number of guns in our classes, libraries, labs, lounges, dormitories, and offices, promises either to shut down such difficult dialogues altogether, or worse, to increase the chances of them turning deadly. Preserving the ability of students, staff, and faculty members to express their opinions and collectively explore the complex nature of the contemporary and historical Middle East, requires that everyone participating in academic discourse feel safe from political or physical pressure to conform to any one line of thinking. Legally permitting weapons in campus buildings can only negatively affect academic freedom.

This law will also adversely affect UT Austin’s competitiveness. Since many faculty and students both inside and outside the university have a negative view of this law, it will make it significantly more difficult to recruit and retain the best faculty and students nationally and from around the world. We are particularly concerned about the effect of the law on the recruitment and retention of minority faculty and students from the United States and from the Middle East. They would understandably feel that their safety could be compromised in settings where they may be viewed –rightly or wrongly – as representatives of the sensitive viewpoints that are the object of our study.

The Texas Legislature has imposed this law on our university community against the majority’s very explicit opposition to it. For all these reasons, we strenuously object to this law and to the presence of concealed guns in campus buildings.
1. Kamran Scot Aghaie, Associate Professor (Dept. Chair)
2. Mahmoud al-Batal, Professor
3. Katie Aslan, Undergraduate Coordinator
4. Blake Atwood, Assistant Professor
5. Samy Ayoub, Lecturer
6. Denise Beachum, Department Manager
7. Kristen Brustad, Associate Professor
8. Mounira Charrad, Associate Professor
9. Dale Correa, Middle Eastern Librarian
10. Stephen Denny, Staff
11. Rasha Diab, Assistant Professor
12. Tarek El-Ariss, Associate Professor
13. Cameron Ford, Administrative Associate
14. M. R. Ghanounparvar, Professor Emeritus
15. Christian Glakas, Assistant Director, Arabic Flagship Program
16. Karen Grumberg, Associate Professor
17. Jo Ann Hackett, Professor
18. Barbara Harlow, Professor
19. Ghada Housen, Lecturer
20. Michael Craig Hillmann, Professor
21. John Huehnergard, Professor
22. David Justh, Graduate Program Coordinator
23. Jonathan Kaplan, Assistant Professor
24. Uri Kolodney, Hebrew & Jewish Studies Librarian
25. Michael Mendoza, Lecturer
26. Anat Maimon, Lecturer
27. Briana Medearis, Events Coordinator
28. Mohammad Mohammad, Associate Professor
29. Wendy Moore, Publications Editor
30. Stephennie Mulder, Associate Professor
31. Jeannette Okur, Lecturer
32. Na’ama Pat-El, Associate Professor
33. Esther Raizen, Associate Professor
34. Adi Raz, Clinical Assistant Professor
35. Sonia Seeman, Associate Professor
36. Anousha Shahsavari, Lecturer
37. Faegheh Shirazi, Professor
38. Denise Spellberg, Professor
39. Samantha Strohmeyer, Staff
40. Maria Tway, Assistant Department Manager
41. Karin Wilkins, Professor