

I value students' differences as strengths.

I practice reflection on action.

I practice imaginative change.

I am self-aware.

I am a learner.

I value courage and determination.

What have you been reflecting on since the teaching occurred?	What did the students come up with that amazed you?	What opportunities did you have to grow as a teacher?
What opportunities for responsiveness to the students arose?	In what ways could you further address learners' diverse identities in your teaching?	How were you courageous in your teaching today?

What work will your students be engaging in today?	In what ways will students feel successful by the end of the lesson?	What would you want their families to see if they walked into the classroom today?
What prior experiences prepared the students for the work today?	Where should I sit in the classroom to observe learners at work?	What would you like my role to be today?

What is one success from this week you'll carry with you into next week?	What is a current strength you have as a teacher?	Can you talk about a student who amazed you this week?
What is something you're working on this week in your teaching?	What have you been dreaming or imagining about trying?	What resources do you need to enact courageous teaching?
